INSTRUCTIONS

- Each week, choose an appropriately challenging list for your students to use.
- There's no need to work your way up from the first list if those words are too simple.
- On the contract, there are four spaces for students to write out their daily task.
 - If this space is insufficient, students can staple their work onto the contract.
 - If you have a short week, simply leave out Day Four.
- Possible tasks are included, although feel free to create your own!
- I gave my class a pretest on Monday, which we corrected as a class.
 - After correcting the pre-test, I passed out the contract so students had an official copy of the words.
 - This gave me a chance to introduce and discuss each word, since some may be new to students.
- Each day, we'd check in with what students came up with for their daily tasks.

Homophone Spelling Contract

TASK CARDS

Here are several ideas for your students' tasks to interact with their homophones. Feel free to mix these up and offer different tasks for different weeks.

But don't just check these off, make them an interactive, fun part of your week. Allow students to share their work with each other in groups, have brave students share with the class, and perhaps make an occasional big deal, such as a poetry party or homophone skit afternoon.

TAKE IT TO THE NEXT LEVEL

These tasks can turn into fun events. They all require kids to get up and do a bit of acting. The key is to always explain and (most importantly) model what you want to see. Let kids practice in groups to get used to feeling a bit silly. Take advantage of your outgoing actors to help you model the tasks.

A Very Punny Joke: Have a "stand-up comedy" Friday, in which students get up and share their best puns of the week or month. Provide a microphone on a stand (doesn't even have to work). Have a rimshot sound effect ready. Teach students a few comedian behaviors: "hey folks, lovely to be here" or "you guys have been a great crowd." If a joke is bad, teach them to say "tough crowd" or pull at their collar and ask "is it hot in here?" And make sure they really emphasize those puns.

A Misunderstanding: Play Abbot and Costello's "Who's On First" to show what's possible with a few puns. Partners will act out their scripts, but be sure to teach them how to "ham it up." These misunderstandings will be way more fun if kids get into it.

Homophone Poems: Set up a beatnik-style poetry reading. Teach kids to snap their fingers and say "cool man" rather than clap. Serve cups of hot chocolate (aka cappuccinos). Play jazz in the background. Encourage kids to bring (or make) black berets and wear black shirts.

Homophone Restaurant: Students will introduce their menus as if they were a maître d'. Teach them to speak with a French accent and demonstrate how a waiter introduces specials: "Tonight we have a lovely..."

Homophone Headlines: Students can act out the role of a news anchor, announcing the day's fascinating happenings. Have a suit coat or other dress apparel for students to slip into. Make a news desk for them to sit at.

A Very Punny Joke

A pun is a joke made using two words that sound the same. Some examples of puns include:

- "Q: Why couldn't the horse talk? A: Because its voice was hoarse!"
- "Q: What did the lonely dessert say? A: Don't desert me!"

Rules

- Create at five jokes based on puns.
- Use words from the provided sets of homophones.
- Your published product should be illustrated.

A Misunderstanding

Create a conversation in which a homophone confuses two characters. One character should think the word has one meaning, while the other thinks it has another.

Example

Student A: "Go to the other aisle and look for some tomatoes."

Student B: "What? You want me to go to another isle? I don't even own a boat!"

Student A: "Why do you need a boat, just walk to the next aisle!"

Student B: "What do you think, I can walk on water?"

Student A: "Why is there a spill?"

Requirement

- You must create a written script, approved by your teacher.

Double Homophone Sentences!

Write sentences that combine two sets of homophones.

- The hoarse horse was banned after it knocked over the band's instruments.
- The son blocked the sun's rays, raising his dad's blood pressure.
- I'd hate to be the bald man who bawled when the bee stung him.

Rules

- Use all the sets of homophones from your list.
- Each sentence must contain at least two sets of homophones.
- Try to make the sentences into an ongoing story!

Homophone Restaurant

Create a dinner menu that features ten sets of homophones. Each menu item should have a title and a description. The title and description must contain

- Spaghetti and meatballs: made by a thoughtful maid.
- Two cheese sandwich: a cheesy delight without too much meat.
- Red sauce and noodles: we read about this dish on a trip to Italy.

Rules

- Include all sets of homophones.
- Published menu must be illustrated.
- Published menu must be in ink, not pencil.

Homophone Poems

Incorporate your homophones into a type of poem known as a limerick:

I knew a bumblebee from near Greece
It was too scared to be seen near a feast
All the grease was too much
And the maid made a fuss
So the bee went home and fell asleep.

Rules

- Use at least three sets of homophones in each poem.
- Follow the structure of a limerick:
 - Rhyme scheme: A A B B A
 - Syllables: 9-9-6-6-9

Homophone Headlines

Write headlines for newspaper stories using homophones. Headlines should announce interesting news.

- Horse Eats Dry Grass, Becomes Hoarse
- Two Men Eat Too Much Food, Go To Hospital
- Tired Maid Made Bed With Person Still Sleeping

Rules

- Headlines aren't complete sentences
- Short words (like "the" or "and") are left out
- Should make us want to learn more
